Setting Yourself Up For Success With Google's Local Listings

By: Paul James

www.iampauljames.com

I recommend you setup a new Gmail account for each business you intend to list on Google.

Once logged into a Gmail account head over to http://www.google.com/business

Click the button "get on google."

Get your business on Google for free

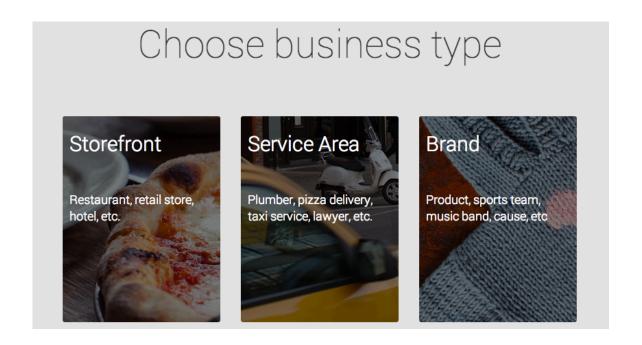

New – Google My Business connects you directly with customers, whether they're looking for you on Search, Maps or Google+.

Depending on Google's layout at the time they'll either ask you to type in your business information or they may first ask what type of business you are.

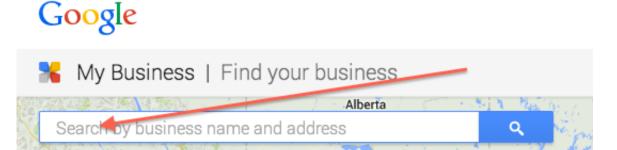

Pick what type if that's what you see first.

Most businesses will fall under "service" or "store."

Now is the time you want to search for your business on Google.

Type in your phone number, address or business name.

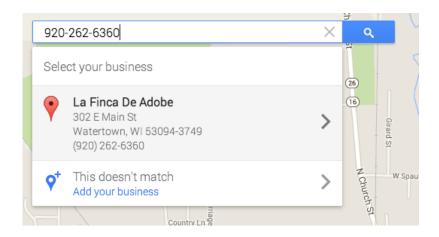

Saskato

If you see your business information pop-up, that's great!

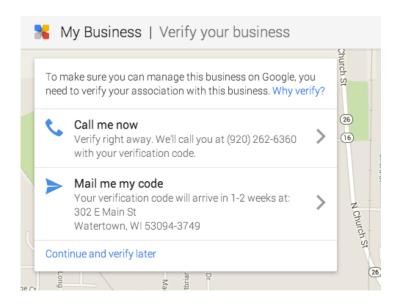

British Columbia This means Google already has your business listed, but you just need to claim it so that they understand you're still in business.

Without claiming it, they have no idea of knowing if you're still accepting customers or not.

Just click your business and then select your verification method.

Depending on the method you choose, they'll either mail or call you with a pin code to verify you're the designated manager of this businesses listing.

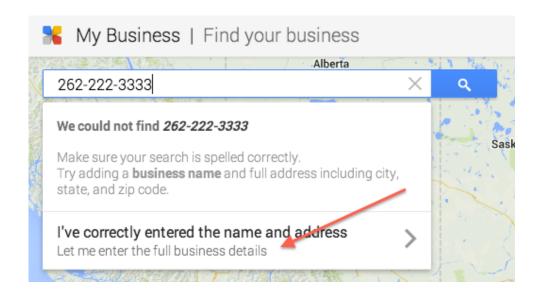

That's it, now you can always head over to the same link from the account you verified your listing at to manage your listing. http://www.google.com/business

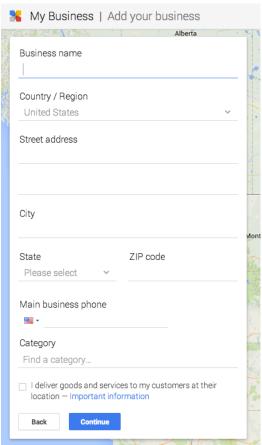

Didn't find your business when you searched for it?

That's okay! It just means Google doesn't have a listing for you.

Just click the option that says, "Let me enter the full business details."

Now just fill out the form and hit continue.

After that you'll be presented with verification options just like I explained earlier.

So now you've got your listing up on Google, what's next?

Chances are you're probably not on the first page.

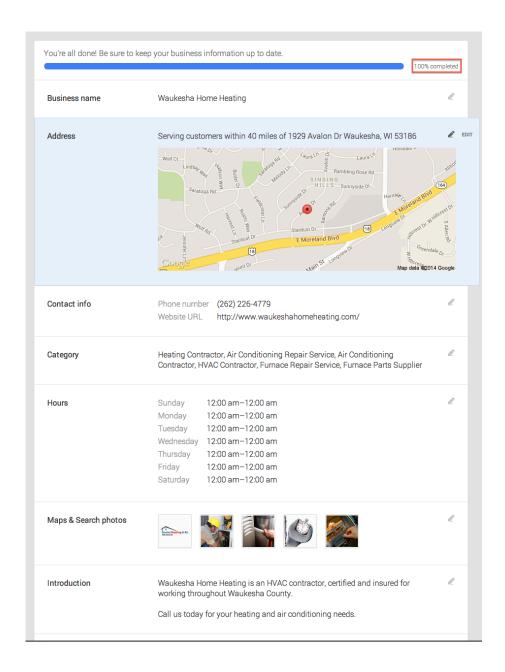

This is because you're business is probably not properly optimized.

The first thing you should think about doing is heading over to your page and adding in all of your company's information.

Your goal should be to get this page to say 100% complete.

Make sure you add in an introduction, hours, categories and link up your website in the contact details section.

Be sure to also add in at least as many photographs as your competitors have.

If they have none a good starting point is 5-10.

These can be pictures of your store, past work or staff.

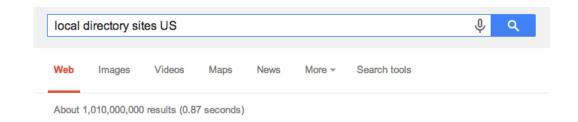

Time to get your business listed with other directories.

Every time Google sees your business name, address and phone number on another site, (IE. Angie's List or Yellow Pages) they consider this a "vote" towards your company and will consider ranking your higher in searches related to your industry.

The technical term for this is called a citation.

You want to go out and find as many local directory sites as you can and get your business listed on them.

Doing a quick Google search will give you a list of these sites.

Creating accounts and listing your business on other directory sites is usually free and a pretty straightforward process.

Make a goal of doing a few per day until you have several built up.

Make sure your website is full of rich content.

Tie in quality content and dedicate a page on your site to talk about each Google category you selected when you created or edited your listing.

I like to stay around 500 words and it's also important to include your category in the article a couple of times.

Bold on instance of it and italicize or underline another instance of it.

This is what's called simple on-page optimization and every little bit helps.

Content is king when it comes to Google so don't skimp out.

Write something customers are going to want to read that will captivate their interest.

It's also recommended that on your homepage you have links going to each of these pages related to your Google categories.

This is the final step!

Get your customers, friends or even family to leave you some reviews.

Google's local listings show a star rating and it's important to get that to show.

It usually takes 5-10 reviews to trigger the star rating, plus getting social proof will boost the conversion rate of the number of people who will actually pick up the phone and call you.

What's Next?

Now that you've made it through this guide I'd like to make sure you understand that any changes you make can take Google up to 2 weeks to recognize.

So although you may do all of this work it could take 2-3 weeks before you see a change in ranking.

I'd also like to invite you to some advanced free training.

I know reading this all on a PDF can be a little hard to grasp, so I'm giving you an opportunity to attend a webinar training event where I'll walk you through stepby-step.

Don't miss this awesome opportunity.

Pick the time that works out best for you here:

http://www.onlinemeetingnow.com/register/?id=q6j539lexz

To your success,

Paul James

